JOHN F. KENNEDY SCHOOL OF GOVERNMENT
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Strategic Management for Leaders of Non-Governmental Organizations

Dates: March 25-29, 2008

Location: Athens Information Technology (AIT), Greece

Tuition - $5,250

Tuition covers all course materials, lunches and local transport but not lodging and transport to and from Athens

Fellowships – Limited and selective

Program Description:

This program is designed to help NGO Leaders facing critical junctures in the socio-political development of their regions to build sustainability and strategic focus into their organizations. The Kennedy School of Government is deeply committed to this program, which we intend to be a multi-year commitment toward serving the NGO sector. Participants will engage each other and our faculty on issues relating to:

- Business and Strategic Planning
- Partnership and Collaboration
- Performance Measurement and Maintaining Organizational Focus
- Governance as Leadership
- Accountability: Beginning and Developing a Committed and Engaged Constituency

In addition to using real life cases, dialogue with Harvard experts in the field of NGO leadership and learning practical frameworks to apply to the challenges they are facing, upon completion of the program participants will receive all the privileges that our Executive Education participants enjoy. This includes invitations to Executive Education events, updates on the latest research at the Kennedy School and access to technology which can be used to maintain a support network of fellow participants who will provide advice and accountability for years to come.

Why Executive Education?

From our experience Executive Education is the most cost effective and immediate means for impacting policy, practice and organizational development. Our programs bring together practitioners, a renowned faculty, and a dynamic curriculum to develop imaginative, workable solutions to the world's most pressing public problems. Participants gain new insights, a new and vibrant network of connections, and a renewed sense of purpose that strengthens their ability to serve the public interest. To quote Calestous Juma, a renowned faculty member and chair of the Science, Technology and Innovation Executive Education program - “One executive education course has the policy and implementation impact of about 100 of my opinion articles”.
